Twisted Life of a Bird

👁 20 ✓ 0 ★ 2

Chapter 1 by Finn Moxcey

Your golden cage glimmers in the distant moonlight coming from the window. These peaceful nights remind you of your past freedom, and it gives you time to think before the chaos of the day. How twisted your Keepers are, keeping you locked up in this small, hopeless cage.

A soft music box hums in the distance. You despise the tune, and your three Keepers who brought it alive. You think of the horrid night in which it had. That day, just like any other, had awoken you with the smell of dragon fruit. Although on this day, the smell came from a new, more distant place. Curious, you had followed it. You regret that big choice every day of your life. That dragon fruit had been a trap. A trap that brought you here, in a flightless prison. Now you spend your days with the Keepers, and their young daughter.

You look out the little Keeper's window. The once flown-in sky is turning the color of that dragon fruit that had lead you to your golden-rimmed cage. Despite its loveliness, you stay put. Escaping at night would only make the little Keeper cry, and the less flying in this enclosure, the better.
